

Abstract of the Disclosure

A method and apparatus for blow molding an article wherein a parison is positioned between three or more mold closures, the mold closures are advanced along a first axis and an axis generally transverse to the first axis, a gas is injected within the interior of the parison to form a molded article, the mold closures are retracted along their respective axes, and the molded article is removed.